1. Objects at Wismut A.G. are divided into three categories: experimental objects (Versuchsobjekte), objects under construction (Aufbaubjekte), and objects under exploitation (Ausbeutungsobjekte). Experimental objects are started at any place where geological research has revealed the presence of ore and working the ground has promised corresponding economic success. During the work preparatory to the exploitation of the ore vein, the object is called an object under construction. After the shafts have been completed and the mining of ore begins, the object is designated an object under exploitation. It is therefore possible that experimental objects, objects under construction, and objects under exploitation can be located at the same place, depending on the branching of the ore vein. Hourly wages are usually paid at experimental objects and objects under construction. On the other hand, premiums are offered at objects under exploitation as an inducement to increase production.
2. Object 86 is an experimental object, formerly Object 11 located in Oerschlern, and has now been built up at Ditttrichshütte; shafts of this object are located in Ditttrichshütte, Brauersdorf, and Saalfeld. The main administration for Object 86 is located in the former labor office at Bräulergasse, Saalfeld. The directors of the object are the Russian MVD officers (fnu) Kotokov and (fnu) Dichimirov.
3. Object 30 is an object under exploitation and is located in Ditttrichshütte. The object extends from Ditttrichshütte to Brauersdorf and contains as many as 400 shafts. The ore obtained from Object 30 is in the form of hard masses of stone and is sorted qualitatively into groups 1, 2, and 3. The uranium content of the ore could not be determined.
4. Object 32 is also located in Ditttrichshütte; it is an object under construction. Object 29 is in Gräfenenthal; one shaft of this object is located in Probstzella. Russian soldiers guard all the objects mentioned, and controls are very strict.
